

The Spirit Of Receiving

This is a small excerpt from a really long and boring chat scam bait with this fool. I would see her online maybe once a week and chat with her, then not hear from her for a while. Look how greedy this whore is...lol.

Erica William (2:20 PM): Ok

Erica William (2:20 PM): 😊

Unfortunately, I did not save the next chat session but it was short, but really funny. I see her online days after this last chat session and ask her why she gave me a fake address – I tell her that I sent the gift and the Post Office returned it to me and said the address does not exist. She asks me what I sent her but I insist that she answer my question first. I was going to tell her that I sent her a Laptop Computer and a $100 Visa Gift Card, but this greedy parasite keeps telling me, "...tell me what you sent and I'll tell you why I gave you a fake address...". I tell her that I'm not telling her what I got her until she tells me why she sent me a fake address because she cost my $80.00 in shipping fees. We keep going back and forth on this – she really wants to know what I sent her!!! After a few minutes, curiosity finally gets her so she agrees to tell me why she gave me a fake address – you see, she moved, lol. Couple things wrong with this – first of all, she gives me her address for me to send a gift to, then in the next 2 days she moves? Second, and even funnier, the address does not exist. I say to her in the chat session – "...the Post Office said that address does not exist. Did you pick up your whole house and move it as well?" She immediately logs out when I said this...lol.

This was one of my longest chat scambaits to date – I actually chatted with this fool for almost six months. Sometimes it was only once or twice a week, but overall it was a boring bait until the end.
