

Village Idiot

At some point dealing with scammers, your name and email gets put on an email list where they assumed that you been scammed before. Then out come these letters – most of the ones I get are actually addressed to my email address, not to “to whom it may concern...”. The only reason I documented this bait, because it is relatively short and uneventful, is because of the last email this idiot sends me and my response.

Attn: Thomas,

This communication is all about Compensation for individuals, cooperate organization and Charity foundation for the whole world by the United Nations Organization whereby your name appeared as one of the beneficiaries hence the reason to contact you.

This event is a measure to those that are been supporting the poor condition of their various countries one way or the other.

Yours Faithfully,

Mr. Adams. Robert.

I have never been victim to any kind of scam before.

Thomas

Attn: Thomas,

Then you are equally calling your president a scam? Contact him immediately if you are able to do so and confirm the legitimacy of this operation through him. Your president is not a scam or did he do some before?

What are you talking about? You said this was to compensate victims of scams and I told you that I have never been scammed before. What does this have to do with the President? And yes, the President is a freaking moron by the way. If he was still in Africa, then yes he would probably be sitting right beside you trying to scam rich Americans out of their hard-earned money.

Thomas

Yes, that was it, the end of the scam. It's a common joke about Obama that "somewhere in Africa, a village is missing its idiot" – well, I believe that to be true except for the village where this butt-munch lives...
