My new thing for all of the Loan Scams is to inquire about Business Lines of Credit. To the uneducated scammer, this sounds like a regular loan for a business and they will quote you terms like a conventional loan, which obviously do not apply to a Credit Line. I've had "Loan Officers" invent terms (duration) for revolving Credit Lines because they don't understand how it works. All they know is how to punch in Interest Rate, Amount, and Duration into a Mortgage Calculator from one of the many Mortgage or Real estate websites out there. This fool tries a different approach; he tries to get me to pay fees first to get around answering questions that he does not understand...LOL.

If you want to pretend that you are a real loan company so you can steal from innocent people, you may want to learn more about Loans and Finance so you don't look so stupid when people ask you questions. That is why you failed, moron.

I figured as mad as he got at the end, we could trade insults for a few. But he cowered and wouldn't play. It must be very dis-inheartening for these idiots to pose as some big important Loan Officer, but not being able to answer simple questions.
