(jilesejibril@yahoo.com)

Where did you see my profile from?

Debbie Dawson

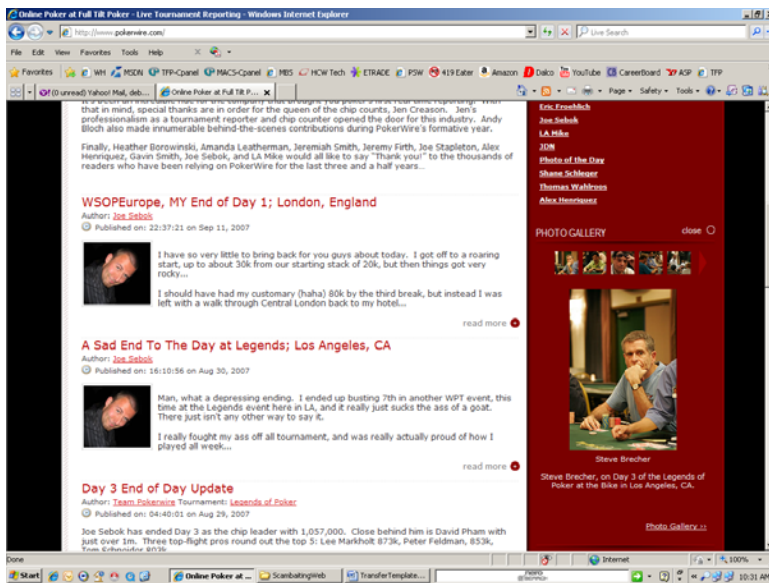

I had a chat session with this fool where I suggested that we exchange pictures. I sent him two of my standard fakes and was waiting for him to send me one of him. He was taking awhile, so I knew he was looking for pictures online to send me. He finally sends me a “picture” that isn’t actually a picture. This idiot copies and saves the link from where he found the picture from (he sent an .htm file). When I opened the .htm file, it logged me out of Yahoo Chat and took me to Google Image Search Results where he stole the picture. Too funny, but I lost the chat transcript for the first part of our chat. Not only did I see where he stole the pictures, but I know what he typed in Google Search to find them – “Guys Pictures”. He picked one at random to send me (incorrectly), and it just so happens that he sent me a picture of Joe Sebock, a Professional Poker Player on the World Poker Tour!!! What a fuckup!

This is how it appears in email – I know you can’t read it, but if you were able to you would see in the HTML code where it says “Google Search Results for ‘Guys Pictures’” and where it actually has Joe Sebocks name from “Picture Found at PokerWire.com”.

Here is where the link takes you after the Search Result page on Google. If you click on the image again, it takes you here;

This is the PokerWire Website, where Joe Sebock is discussing poker topics in a forum.
